Course Description:

The course is aimed at expanding the theoretical understanding and knowledge of the dynamic landscape of international political economy. It would introduce students to the principal theories, approaches, core concepts and critical debates in international political economy. Certain important issues in international political economy such as development; trade; finance and money; transnational corporations; knowledge and technology; and, environment would be explored within a theoretical framework in addition to the discourse on globalisation; global governance; and, new social actors. It would make students aware about the distinctive nature of international political economy and competing theoretical perspectives and enable them to apply theoretical tools to investigate and critically analyse the patterns and trends of distribution of power, wealth and resources amongst nations and people.
